

CAC Awaits Interviewers

The proposed visits of recruiter/interviewers from the Dow Chemical Company and the CIA drew sharp criticism from last night's meeting of the Campus Action Council.

The interviewers, presently scheduled to appear on campus Tuesday and Wednesday, will meet with a variety of CAC-sponsored response, ranging from a sit-in to less violent types of engagement in the form of pickets and pamphlets.

Stanley Griffith '68, a member of CAC, informed President Ray L. Heffner and Dean Robert O. Schulze of the intentions of the Council. No administration response has been made.

One of the advocates of a sit-in, Ken Goldstein '68, discussed his reasons for choosing physical confrontations with the interviewers. He is motivated by "a moral repulsion at the immoral and subversive activities of the CIA itself."

In addition to considering specific actions to be taken against the interviewers next week, the Council discussed the University system of recruiting by national corporations and organizations in general. A majority of CAC members present endorsed a resolution which condemned the present system and suggested an alternative method for use in the future.

The resolution stated, "In order to provide a true service to its students the University should endeavor to insure that students contemplating careers with an organization should have the fullest possible knowledge of both the career opportunities and the larger social and ethical questions involved in employment with that organization. We believe that the present recruiting system of private interviews fulfills neither of the above criteria."

It went on to propose, "that organizations desiring to inform students of career opportunities be required by the University to give their presentations in an open session where they may be questioned freely about all aspects of their work."

According to Mr. Griffith, Dow recruiters have already indicated that they will not engage in open general discussion-debate sessions.
